

Unproductivity at the Wrong Time

Weekly Report Twenty-Eight 04/02/18-04/08/18

Week twenty-eight has felt more successful than others, yet less productive. It has not included as much as other weeks. However, it was a nice break from the crazy. The break might not be a good idea, as there is a lot to do still. With mentor visits and final product and the busy schedule, their truthfully is no time to rest.

The mentor visits progress was a large success for this week. With a mentor visit this week and one scheduled for next week, there is already a completion of the hours required for the month. The mentor visits are becoming more exciting with each one. While getting to observe therapy for different children is so eye-opening to see the differences across the children.

The final product progress has slowed down recently and it needs to pick back up. The product needs some focus and work in order for everything to be ready in time. While it is a stressful thing, avoiding it can only make it worse. There is a mentor visit scheduled for this next week to talk about the final product. Hopefully this will build-up the motivation regarding the final product.

Scheduling has also become a large stress area. It is so hard to make everything work with mentor visits, classes, and drill team, while still having time for oneself. It is hard to balance all of these things. While it is hard, it is still happening. It means giving up an early release, or all of them. It also means doing more class work as home work in order to make sure all of the work is finished and mentor visits are still happening.
